The Dundee Mountain Film Festival is the UK's longest continuously running mountain film festival - the first Festival being held in 1983 to raise funds for the restoration of the bridge at Bachnagairn, Glen Clova, in memory of Dundee mountaineer Roy Tait.

From its early beginnings The Dundee Mountain Film Festival (DMFF) has developed an outstanding record of hosting national and international speakers to entertain and inform general members of the public as well as the passionate outdoor enthusiast. The Festival programme includes not only well known personalities, but also local and rising talent, thereby contributing to continued enjoyment and success for those engaged in mountain and other outdoor activities both recreationally and professionally.

The screening of international as well as locally produced films in the mountain and other challenging environments is a major feature of the Festival. These advance public knowledge of many geographical areas, the wide variety of activities undertaken in such terrains, as well as identifying the flora, fauna, and culture of the people whose home is in such surroundings.

The Festival also hosts large displays of mountain related paintings and photography, by both national and international artistes, as well as a comprehensive exhibition of trade, voluntary organisations, and archival material, all of which enhances further understanding and enjoyment of the montane environment.

In addition a supporting "Fringe" programme is presented on the days prior to the main two day Festival which offers an eclectic mix of information, education, and entertainment.

The Dundee Mountain Film Festival through its annual position in the outdoor enthusiasts calendar acts as a strong social focal point promoting friendship, reunions, and other networking opportunities in the warm convivial atmosphere of the 400 seat theatre, and exhibition halls.

Dundee Mountain Film Festival is a member of the International Alliance for Mountain Film, and through its recognised national and international standing attracts wide publicity in all hard copy and electronic mediums.

The Dundee Mountain Film Festival offers four Sponsorship Packages which are detailed on the following pages.

The Dundee Mountain Film Festival is organised by the unpaid volunteer committee of the Dundee Mountain Film Festival Society - Scottish registered charity SC 029267.
